United Way Fox Cities helps people like Becky.

(Becky's story was originally published in the Post-Crescent September 15, 2017 in an article titled "Diaper banks are 'a blessing' to families in need" by Jen Zettel, USA Today Network-Wisconsin.)

Before Becky Miller heard about the Fox Cities Diaper Bank, she would go without eating to make sure her daughter had food and clean diapers. Miller, of Seymour, heard about the Fox Cities Diaper Bank through Community 2000, a program of United Way Fox Cities. She utilized the diaper bank for two years and said it helped significantly.

"There's so many times it saved us because we were scraping for money to get diapers, and it happened to be that time of the month where we would be able to go there and get the diapers," she said. Miller felt the program made such an impact on her family that she recommended it to others she thought might benefit. "It's just an amazing program — it really is," she said.

Nearly 900 babies receive diapers each month from the Fox Cities Diaper Bank, an initiative of United Way Fox Cities.
